PREFACE

THIS forty-ninth volume of AMERICAN BOOK-PRICES CURRENT is a record of rare books in wartime. It encompasses a year of uneasiness for many kinds of businesses and possibly an especially difficult year for the rare book trade. But the existence of this volume is an important evidence of the vitality of book collecting in American life. The erratic tendencies apparent during the season 1941-1942, and noted in last year's preface, continued well into 1943. Not until the end of the season was in sight did there appear the upward trend in prices observed earlier in other kinds of collecting.

With the exception of the first part of the sale of the Alexander Biddle Papers, there were no distinguished collections offered during the season. Plenty of common rare books came onto the market, as they usually do, but they were bargains for the most part. The lack of an important sale in the fore part of the season to temper the market probably accounts for much of the weakness of this year. There was offered, however, an unusually large number of uncommon books (strangers to the pages of this series), including more fine art books than have been seen at auction in many years. Combined with some splendid illustrated books, extra-illustrated and finely printed books, and with the more familiar friends, they make the current volume of records useful to a large number of book dealers, librarians, and book and art collectors.

Monographs on famous artists have been catalogued under their authors' names (when known) and cross-indexed under the names of the individual artists, in order to facilitate use of the volume. The many catalogues and inventories of art collections likewise have been cross-indexed and may be found under the name of the collection, the gallery, or the author. Otherwise, this volume is made on the pattern of its predecessors, and the uninitiated are asked to consult the NOTES of the 1941 volume for helpful hints on its use.

One hundred and three sales (an increase of nineteen over last season) have been recorded, listing about 12,000 items. Auction houses handling material principally in the lower and middle brackets account for the larger numbers of both sales and items described.

The editor owes thanks to S/Sgt. Edward Lazare for much assistance, in spite of the sergeant's more pressing duties and (the editor fears) at the expense of his leisure. Sergeant Lazare's amazing bibliographical knowledge prevented many errors; those which are found are the editor's. While he feels the temporary role an honor, the editor trusts that the sergeant will re-assume the editorship before too long a time has passed.
